BACCHYLIDES

A typical Greek lyric poet - Born c.
480s, (near end 6th cent BC) - He was rival of Pindar, and a great favorite of HIRRO, the tyrant of Syracuse, whom he celebrated in three poems. He was crowned, but, being the youngest, was named last of the nine lyric poets worthy of immortality; 107 lines of his poetry rendered in quotations; one 812 verses being the longest. Drs 1897 the British Museum secured in Egypt about 200 fragments of his papyrus. These formed 1070 lines; 6 poems were almost wholly intact, 6 in pieces, and 8 only partly. 14 are odes in honor of victories in war, of which 3 are duplicates of Pericles, and the remaining 6 are hymns and songs of praise. One poem tells the story of Theseus and Poseidon, the first ever known

Athenian Statesman

"I say that as a city we are the school of Hellas": the boast by a famed Athenian statesman, Perecles, was founded in truth. Both a far sighted leader and an ardent imperialist, he became a key architect of Athens greatest age.
